

Andrew Rule

Journalist, Author and Speaker

Andrew Rule broke into metropolitan newspapers when he suggested to then editor of The Age that the rival Herald had offered him a job. At the time, he was the only cadet reporter in captivity to have ridden the winner of a horse race. He has previously worked for 'The Times' and 'The Spectator' - the Gippsland Times and the Maffra Spectator, in East Gippsland.

Rule went on to cover some of the most notorious Australian stories of recent decades - and live to tell the tale. He broke the Jennifer Tanner case, which resulted in an inquest finding being quashed and serving policeman Denis Tanner being named as a killer by the Coroner. The resulting documentary A Death in the Family won a Logie and was highly awarded.

Rule has written, edited and published more than 30 true crime books - including the best-selling Underbelly series with John 'Sly' Silvester, which inspired the television drama on Melbourne's gangland war. He and Silvester ghosted the Chopper books that led to the acclaimed feature film starring Eric Bana.

He is now an associate editor of Australia's biggest daily, the Herald Sun, for which he writes features and columns. He wrote the definitive biography of businessman Kerry Stokes, published in 2015, and the award-winning biography of the world champion racehorse Winx in 2018. He has won many national journalism awards and has been sued almost as often.
