

Deborah Knight

TV presenter, international reporter and MC

Deborah Knight is a Charles Sturt University graduate and accomplished journalist.

Deborah began her career in media at the 2WG in Wagga Wagga and has more than 15 years of experience in the industry. Radio was Deborah's first love, and after several years spent fine-tuning her skills, and keen for a new challenge, she took up an offer from Mix 106.5 in Sydney.

From there Deborah accepted an excellent opportunity to join state broadcaster the ABC, where she further secured a reputation as a serious and noteworthy journalist within the industry. Her ability to swiftly grasp new subject matter was quickly noticed and the national broadcaster utilised her talents across a variety of roles from rural reporting to Triple J, followed by the prestigious AM and breakfast program on Radio National.

From radio to television, Deborah's first role as a presenter/reporter was with the much-loved ABC TV show Land Line. Deborah's work, specifically interviewing the Prime Minister, caught the eye of Channel Ten which in turn set the wheels in motion for a move to commercial television. From the ABC, Deborah joined Network Ten in the Canberra Press Gallery.

Deborah covered two Federal elections and regularly presented Meet the Press and the station's network news, before taking the leap overseas. Here, Deborah headed up Ten's US bureau (based in Los Angeles) for three years, covering world-changing stories including September 11, which Deborah counts as one of the highlights of her career alongside the re-election of George W Bush and the Iraq War.

Deborah returned to Australia in November 2004 and became co-anchor of Sydney's Ten News at Five bulletin in January 2006. In 2011 Deborah moved to Channel Nine to take up the opportunity to join their on-air news team. In 2019, Deborah was announced as co-host of the Today Show with Georgie Gardener, in the show's first ever all female host line-up. If this wasn't enough, Deborah would also continue to read the Weekend News for Channel Nine.

In 2020 Deborah was announced as 2GB's first female talkback radio host, taking over from Steve Price until November 2023 when she assumed the role as host of the station's show Money News for 2024.
